Foreword

WE PRESENT IN THIS Bulletin a glimpse at the attractiveness with which the Anderson College girl associates daily. Visitors and patrons are constantly making impartial criticism that while the photographic representations of Anderson College are interesting and inviting, they do not convey the full impression of fact, as they see it with their eyes, of the unity, largeness and beauty of the campus, buildings and equipment. It is especially pointed out that the halls, class rooms and student apartments, which have most to do with the satisfaction of the students' health and comfort, are not well represented by the photographer. We have to confess the criticism, though we do not regard it as important.

These are the facts about Anderson College:

First: Its physical plant and surroundings are unsurpassed and its arrangements and facilities for living and working in an educational sense satisfy the most exacting standards.

Second: The two ideas of the community organization in Anderson College sought for and practically realized are the fellowship of a large Christian family conscious of itself and its honorable ambition as a body and also that the individual girl is the particular concern of its educational method, with the pressure put upon her to make herself count distinctively in the college life.

Third: The administration and the faculty are of one spirit and habit. Twenty-seven men and women who have equipped themselves as specialists in the work they undertake and are held responsible for efficiency in their special departments. This idea of keen obligation prevails throughout in Anderson College.

Fourth: The success of Anderson College is not incidental or ordinary. It is a Christian success, by the law of "whatsoever we sow we reap." It was founded as an institution on sincerity and sacrifice. It has in its life and in support of its future a gallant city, whole-heartedly behind it; a great county of 80,000 people who love it; a great State Convention of 200,000 Baptists which guarantees its continued power to sustain its standards. The advantages of this institution are offered to young ladies who are seeking the best preparation of character and effectiveness, with the assurance of experience and of a record made by Anderson College Alumnae who have gone forth to prove their mettle.
